

The History of a Man (Classic Reprint)

At the close of the last chapter, I have specified the objects and aims which I have sought in the following volume. Although, formally, in many parts fictitious, the quality by which I hope it will be found peculiarly distinguished, is fearless truthfulness; and being a book of this pretension, I anticipate not a little criticism, and, perhaps, detraction or abuse. Every man, however, worthy of that name, and whose history deserves to be written, learns, in the course of his experience, to rate these things at their true value; and so, I trust, has the author of these pages. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
