

Displacement and Discovery: The psychosocial experiences of migration on horn of African refugee men and the implications for social work intervention

Over the last two decades, increasing numbers of refugees have resettled in Australia from Africa. The purpose of the study is to focus on the psychological and social experiences of young African refugees in Australia and to establish new insight into how young people experience displacement and resettlement. This study documents the discovery of a culturally responsive social work intervention model for refugees. The Kuusa Transition Model designed and implemented with two groups of young men in this research, was based on a traditional African methods of assisting groups in life transition and contemporary social work practice using action research principles.
